IDLE LAND NEEDS YOUR HELP

There are many farms or one-time woodlands all over the state that need reforestation. If you have fields or cut-over timberland, why not plant them with pine now?

Trees give you a growing crop on that idle land. They are an investment in which returns start coming in, in 20 years and continue to yield such returns until the final harvest in 40 to 60 years.

While waiting for a saleable product your land value increases each year. These same trees will also serve to improve soil structure, control erosion, give game cover and provide beauty and a place to enjoy outdoor sports.

Open fields usually do not need any preparation for planting, but cut-over timberland must have some work done on it. The brush and low quality trees left after the timber is removed must be killed to reduce the competition with the seedlings you plant. There are various methods used to accomplish this, but they will not be discussed here. The important thing at the moment is to recognize the need and value of planting, and then to contact a forester, Chief Forest Warden, or your county agent for further details.

The federal government will supply financial aid to landowners who accomplish reforestation under the the ACP (Agricultural Conservation Program). Money is appropriated for assistance in preparing the land for planting and for the actual planting. Those who desire assistance should do so without delay by making personal application to the county ASC office manager.
